

Diabetes Manager Earns Acclaim For Local Company

WellDoc Says Information Available 24-7

August 11, 2011

By Jennifer Franciotti

The results of a landmark study on diabetes are being released soon.

11 News reporter Jennifer Franciotti said it involves a clinical trial in Baltimore by a local company that is helping patients through mobile technology.

WellDoc is a healthcare software company that uses mobile applications to deliver coaching and self-management support solutions to patients, Franciotti said. Its app is called Diabetes Manager.

Founder Dr. Suzanne Clough said the app is easy to use and allows patients 24-7 access to information about their numbers and steps necessary to make corrections.

The app is working so well for patients that the results from the clinical study are being released in the September issue of the American Journal of Diabetes.

Patients like Joseph

Rihel said something so simple has made all the difference in world in keeping him healthy. He was part of a clinical study in 2009 that involved daily -- even hourly -- feedback on his blood sugar numbers.

Click the video link above to watch Franciotti's report.

